Initial trials of a new implantable pulse generator in cardiac resynchronization therapy in patients with chronic heart failure. Cardiac resynchronization therapy is a novel approach for treatment of patients with symptomatic chronic heart failure (CHF) and left ventricular systolic dysfunction. The device used in these patients is the Cardiac

Resynchronization Therapy (CRT) device. Because of the presence of a loose 'housing' and an exposed battery, the previous design of CRT device was associated with a substantial risk of infection. Two newly designed CRT devices (CS1.5M and CS3) with a molded housing and an insulated battery have been tested in 44 CHF patients with a mean LVEF of  $28 \pm 8\%$  and a broad spectrum of CHF etiologies. The median follow-up duration was  $12.4 \pm 9.6$  months. Data from the follow-up visits were compared to those at baseline. During the follow-up, no pacing thresholds were over 0.5 V or any electrical failure occurred. The new devices were associated with a marked reduction in the number of infection serum adiponectin, leptin, adiponectin/leptin ratio and cardio-ankle vascular index in patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus. The cardio-ankle vascular index (CAVI) was found to be a useful diagnostic marker for cardiovascular complications in type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM). The aim of this study was to explore whether the adiponectin/leptin ratio (ALR) and adiponectin/leptin ratio/body mass index (ALRIB) also have any effect on the prognosis of T2DM. A total of 118 T2DM patients were enrolled in the study. We measured the levels of serum adiponectin, leptin, CAVI and ALRIB. In addition, the patients were followed up for 9 months to record the incidence of cardiovascular events. Multivariate
