It's still not over, however, with five contests left to go on June 7. The other candidates – John Kasich, Jeb Bush, Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio – failed to reach the 15% threshold needed to win delegates. Thus, they have withdrawn from the race, with the exception of Bush, who won delegates in Massachusetts and his home state of Florida. The Associated Press surveyed the remaining delegate targets and determined that Trump has at least 35 of the 1,237 delegates needed to win the nomination outright: Trump can still win without the support of a majority of the remaining delegates. But in order to do that, he needs to win at least 60 percent of the delegates who remain undecided. A 60 percent margin is possible because none of his remaining opponents are close to a majority of delegates. But Trump would also have to win three-quarters of remaining delegates to overcome the head start Cruz earned when he won an outright majority of the Texas delegates. Unless the delegates in the remaining states shift toward Trump, he will win all of the delegates awarded so far, according to the Associated Press.
