In the midst of an unexpected incident, the world's weather patterns are off balance. As a result, the sea is growing unnaturally warmer and the air thicker with lower cloud cover. As the water descends into an irreversible winter, an enigmatic group of weapons-wielding operatives emerges and sets up operations to seize the remaining resources of the surface. The deep sea has become a dark and unforgiving place. Now only the bravest of the brave survive. Aquanox Deep Descent is a first person underwater vehicle shooter, in which players control a variety of customizable ships to engage in fierce battles in the dystopian deep sea world of Aqua. In the near future the Earth's surface has become uninhabitable. What remains of humankind lives in former mining and research stations, deep below the surface of the sea. Born and raised in the only world we know, the loose network of underwater settlements, torn by the war for resources and dominance between various factions. Take control of a team of highly trained fighter pilots and experience an epic story in the dark world of Aquanox. Send your enemies down to Davy Jones' Locker with well-aimed torpedoes, shrapnel blasts, mines and more in a journey that takes you across the world's oceans and into the deepest trenches of our Earth. Fight - Action-packed vehicle shooter combat that supports a wide variety of play styles Co-op - 4 player drop-in co-op, with four unique pilots who are all involved in the game story Customize - Choose and upgrade your ships, making them fit your preferred playing style Explore - Discover the deepest corners of the ocean VPP - Classic multiplayer modes like Deathmatch and Team Deathmatch Dogfighting Action game play action

What's new in Witty Witch:

 Review I played and reviewed Grisaia Phantom Trigger a couple months back and thought I would talk about some of the background music that I used on this game. In fact, I wished I had bought the OST on the day it was released. I had a huge backlog of games that I wanted to listen to the music from and Grisaia was high on the list. Not to mention I watched too much anime and enjoyed it, so I never felt like I was getting old and passed a point where I can't enjoy certain stuff anymore. Anyway, I immediately wanted to listen to the soundtrack and just realized that it didn't come with the game. Not to worry! I was able to quickly find the OST on CDJapan, download it and replace the Grisaia Ending to use in my game… except I couldn't find a full download or purchase option for it. So I contacted CDJapan by email and eventually got in contact with a nice customer service person. He promised to send me an email with their file (I checked my spam folder!) and after a day or so, the email came in. I opened the email to this (right click on image to see whole thing bigger): Yes! I was able to download and copy the soundtrack right to my game. I pressed play and here's the first track: I know there are far more good tracks in this album than any of the ones I had heard so far. This is the first Grisaia album I have listened to and I will definitely pick up future volumes as well. And anyone who hasn't played Grisaia definitely needs to add it to their backlog, particularly with the OST being completely free! Back to BGM Masterthoughts… I didn't really plan my OST playlist until late, right before my main save point so this is a small selection from the end. By the way, I've also listed out all my save points (spoilers!) from the start to my final stop: The OST is on the soundtrack if you have it with no OSTs, the OST is on Disc4 if you have it with OSTs. The games These are games I've completed that have OSTs. If you want to call these games, you need to read a game note at the start of this section, 'game note' atour visitor information tour tour Selection if an object exists, a psychological life is at stake. If it is degraded, in ruin or is unaffordable, the moral consequences are decisive. Within this context, only a small fraction of architectural treasures survive. Prominently, abandoned buildings and landfills have shaped our world. Similar to forgotten fragments of art, they act as a reminder of the lives of those who are no longer with us. All around the globe nature is transforming. For example, the urban space is being razed, often during a period of economic downturn and resource scarcity. The cities of the future can be imagined and researched in any country, but along with that also society's ills emerge. The theme of "unbelievable space" addresses these issues using the combination of science, design, architecture and multimedia. In an exhibition that becomes a city, the unreal dimension is shown together with the idealistic concept of architectural metamorphosis. The intriguing linking of history and science provides insights into global society, as well as the near future. Only the conditions that do not exist anymore will determine the future. The design research session will also be a key part of the event, enabling visitors to experience what the future will be like.Three quick points here. This post is my take on the Libao crisis. Not much, but not nothing either. The first one is the following: It looks like this is a golden opportunity for the Obama administration to try to impose its will on China. It is certainly in the US's national interest to see China state its position well about something that they have invested heavily in with the Xi – it will demonstrate China's continued resolve to being a Chinese-led world economy. The proposed meeting between Obama and Xi is a good opportunity for the US to grab first on this issue. A Beijing rejection is an explicit signal, and one the administration should be eager to highlight, and celebrate (even if passive – we should probably avoid saying what they've done to deserve
