Two different trimesters were used. Divers from 129 countries participated, of which the Unified Team was not represented. This was the only time the diving was held during the men's diving competition until the London 2012 Summer Olympics. I am just starting to learn Python, and have a basic understanding of the syntax. Here are two examples: `x = int(raw_input('Enter an integer: ')) print x` and `def find(x, y): print x, y find(1, 2)` If I try to feed the function `find` the two positional parameters, what would be the correct way to do it? A: There is no correct way, it depends on the function. In `find(1, 2)`, your parameters are either named parameters with keyword argument assignment, or defaults are supplied. You can always evaluate the function with no arguments, to see what happens. `print find # this prints the function, its docstring, and its arguments print find(1, 2)` For `find(1, 2)`, this would print: Enter an integer: 1 2 Just ignore the `()` or `(1, 2)` if they're annoying A: I just tried both methods and found it quite surprising that they did not work with the function `find(1, 2)`, I would have expected something like this: `>>> help(find) Help on function find in module __main__: find(a, b) (count`
