an anisotropic triangular lattice with vector $\mathbf{\omega}=(1,0)$ and filling $n_s=0.8$ at temperature $T=0.5$. So far, we have considered a lattice gas model with a fixed number of particles and therefore fixed filling factor. By using a large number of replicas N_r of these systems, we can access any value of the filling factor. Another possibility is to allow the filling factor to fluctuate. If Ω_0 is large, the number of replicas accessible is restricted to integer values. However, with moderate values of Ω_0 , fluctuations of \bar{n} are large enough that the system may explore all integer values of n . We numerically investigated the average magnetization of these systems. Figure \[fig.noflip\] shows results obtained for a system of area 3×3 with $\Omega_0 = 0.02$ at temperature $T = 0.5$ at different values of the number of replicas N_r . In the region 0.5
