This is my first question so go easy on me :p I'm not entirely sure how to phrase this question so I will probably not find a good answer until I ask it! I have a simple relationship between the mass of an object and the velocity that it gains on collision with another object. This is as follows:
$$\frac{m_i v_i}{r_i} = \frac{m_j v_j}{r_j}$$
 where  $m$  is mass,  $v$  is velocity,  $r$  is the distance between the two particles. When I find the  $m$  of both objects and  $v$  of just one, does the velocity of the object with the smaller mass increase more than the object with the higher mass? The answer seems intuitive but intuitively I feel like mass is connected to gravity and therefore to velocity and that they would change linearly... but maybe that's wrong. Any pointers would be appreciated! A: Velocity is independent of mass. The only variable that really changes is momentum, and this changes linearly with mass as predicted by Newtonian gravity (actually, the power is  $1/2$
