Designing ligands for new targeted cancer therapies. This review will discuss the relationship between structure and activity of tricyclic oxazolotriazinamines and oxetanes in a general manner. Particular attention will be paid to the design of inhibitors with selective activity against mutated forms of the HER2 receptor and the EGFR receptor and will also focus on the synthesis of oxazolotriazinamine and oxetane building blocks. The main topic will be the improvement of T(2/3), T(1/3), and the cyclic analogues, the synthesis of the appropriate building blocks and the design of more active compounds. Some of the most interesting compounds are presented. As a last part of the review, the ability of tricycl
